Radio Program

Today only about 400 white rhinoceroses. They are said to be residing in Zululand, about 200, and the same number of the upper Nile valley lives in the Lado district. The white rhino is much larger than the black one. The former's white skin is the result of mud baths. Otherwise the two are quite similar in color.

During the middle of the last century large numbers of white rhinoceroses or square-lipped rhinoceroses were present in the region to the north of the Orange River in what is now known as Bechuanaaland.

These animals are larger than their black cousins and have a square-lipped head of a pointed, prehensile one, such as the black rhinos possess.

These rhinos are extremely fond of wallowing in the mud. The skin becomes caked with it and from a distance they appear to be white.

Destruction of these animals went on until 1890, when officials of Zululand realized these animals were reduced to a small herd of from 50 to 200. Then they were given legal protection.

In South Africa the white rhinoceros became extinct.

The female white rhino is a special guest at zoo, the only one in captivity. She drinks one gallon of milk a day. Her height is 2 feet 6 inches and she weighs 75 pounds. She is only 2 weeks old, without a hair on her hide save a perky tuft
